An Extraordinary Incident of the American Team's Visit to Dublin.

After fifteen minutes of the most tremendous enthusiasm ever known in a theatre, Miss Bessie Sudlow, well-known in Niblo's and other New York theatres, came forward to sing the "Star Spangled Banner."

She seems to have made hosts of friends at this side of the ocean. She looked uncommonly well and much more womanly than when I last saw her at home.

She sang the song splendidly, though manifestly affected by the great crowd and the enthusiasm of the time.

When she had finished, the applause was deafening. Mrs. Dakin sent her a beautiful bouquet, and the whole party handed down a basket of flowers, ornamented with the Stars and Stripes.

Miss Sudlow kissed the flag and sang the song again. I can hardly tell you, in the hope of credence, the scene that ensued. Our people were very well pleased—the Irish were boundless in their enthusiasm.

Matters were not made easier by the conductor of the band. He played, and the forces at his disposal being superb in number and skill, he played magnificently.

"The Star Spangled Banner," "Hail Columbia," "Tramp, Tramp," "Yankee Doodle," "Red, White and Blue," and one of the negro melodies. The first two went off well. I learned from Mr. Michael Gunn, who is a public man here, that "Tramp, Tramp," had a political significance in Ireland.

This was soon made manifest by the cheering with which it was received, and the effect was heightened when the audience, numbering nearly 5,000, sang the last verse in good time and with amazing power.

Was there ever such a people for merriment? Now they were on the tip of good humor. In five minutes they were hooting, yelling, hissing, whistling and groaning "Red, White and Blue," because the flag of England was thus composed.

One-half the crowd was of one opinion and the other of a very different. They maintained the noisy contest all the while, and there was no peace until the band had concluded. Then the weight of the crowd began to tell upon two stairways leading from the pit floor to the stage.

Half a dozen times the occupants came down pell mell on the people below them, and then they fought and laughed and cursed and shouted in a manner more surprising than pleasant.

A very unfortunate young gentleman with a very excellent tenor voice came forward after one of these encounters and essayed to sing "The Marseillaise" in a Berlin singing house he could not have raised a more thunderous storm.

The audience lashed themselves into a terrific rage. I need hardly tell you the song celebrates the English victory over the French at Trafalgar.

The very instant the vocalist sang the second line, showing the French to be foemen, the uproar began. They hissed the singer off the stage—hissed him in a manner which you should hear before you could believe. He ran off soon enough. They were not satisfied. They demanded a song of their own choosing; but he was inexorable, and so the programme, so far as vocalism was concerned, came to an end.

The band played various selections from operas; but the audience hooted to the last, and cried out for the "programme" in a lusty wrath. Finally they got tired, or recovered their good humor; and fearing least the Americans should mistake their local and native pleasantries for anything but what they were, they gave a tremendous cheer for the team, comically adding, "We wish you every success, except at the match." I consider last night's experience suggestive.

The Irish people ought to be let alone. They are naturally good natured, exuberant, humorous and easily led. When they don't get what they want, they seldom look for it, and they readily content themselves, though they are very angry if you say so. But to tease with philosophy a people who cannot listen to a song which celebrates the melancholy death of a man to whose memory and exploits there is the grandest memorial in Dublin, is foolish in the extreme.

The wonderful things in colored stockings are most striking, but fat women shouldn't get the horizontal stripes. This item of fashionable intelligence is one of the other glimpses of great truths.

THE DIARY OF JOHN Q. ADAMS.

A Difference with Daniel Webster, and a Case of Duty on Molasses.

A passage in the journal apropos of Mr. Webster's speech on the tariff bill (1842) exhibits a curious specimen of the political complications of the day, and throws some light on the mutual personal relations of the two great statesmen.

I walked with Plummer to the Capitol to hear the close of Mr. Webster's speech upon the tariff, which I did. He spoke about an hour; but the principal part of his speech was delivered yesterday.

It was universally admitted to be an able and powerful speech. Many of the members came and spoke to me while I was in the House. Tomlinson, of Connecticut, and Van Rensselaer, of New York (Albany), spoke of accounts received by them from their respective States, containing manifestations of opinion against Mr. Crawford, who is now denominated the caucus candidate.

J. W. Taylor told me that J. A. Dix had been with him this morning from Gen. Brown, who was extremely anxious himself to see Taylor. The object was to state to Taylor that it was the desire of Mr. Calhoun to be supported for the office of Vice President, that there was every prospect of a certainty that there would be a majority of the Legislature of New York for me; that the wish of Mr. Calhoun's friends was to fall in with this prospect, and they wished that this arrangement might be further recommended from this place.

Taylor said he believed the best way would be to let the thing take its course. I said that my friends would do as they should think proper. Personally, and on purely public grounds, I should prefer to see the Vice Presidency conferred upon General Jackson. I believed the public sentiment among those really my friends was decidedly, perhaps unalterably, the same. The only possible reason for hesitation was Jackson's being a candidate for the first office, and for that reason I thought the course of New York should be left to itself. I had no objection to Mr. Calhoun's obtaining the Vice Presidency.

C. A. Foote gave me a small colored drawing, directed to Mrs. Adams, sent, as he said, by his eldest sister, a widow Bryant—an emblem of friendship. He said his sister and his father were both great Adamites, though he himself was a caucus man.

I told him, laughing, that his sister was a wiser politician than he—which, he said, was very possible.

Crowninshield, after Webster had finished his speech, had some conversation with him in his seat, and immediately afterward came to me and inquired if I had expressed an opinion in favor of the present tariff bill. I said no—not as it stood. The double duty upon molasses was to me an insuperable objection against it. He said he had just been talking with Webster, and asked him how he came on with his Presidential affairs; to which he answered he did not know, and to tell him the truth, did not care. Why so? Why, it seemed to him nothing was to be got with one more than with another. There was this damned tariff, and our friend J. Q. is as bad upon it as any of the rest. "No," said Crowninshield; "I have understood he was not in favor of this bill." "I had it," said Webster, "from his own lips."

While Crowninshield was telling me this, Webster came out from his seat, and was passing by me. I called to him, and he sat down by me. I asked him if he had said I had told him I was in favor of this tariff bill as it now stood. He said no; I had had no conversation with him on the subject; but he had been told last week that, upon some inquiry made of me, I had answered I was in favor of the bill.

Crowninshield had not expected I should so immediately call upon Webster for explanation; and Webster expected it as little. They were both embarrassed. Crowninshield said he had understood Webster to have said he had my opinion directly from myself—which Webster again explicitly disavowed.

When he was gone Mr. Crowninshield told me that Webster had expressly said in words what he had repeated to me; it was impossible that he should have misunderstood him, and added he had not a doubt that Webster had positively engaged to support Calhoun for the Presidency, and was now ready to support any one else. At all events, this incident completes the demonstration of Webster's political feeling toward me. Calhoun and Crawford have both taken hold of his ambition, and he has fallen into their toils.

A Turtle Story.

A correspondent writing from Gill winds the following yarn about turtles: While L. M. Hosley was at work in his cornfield, one day last week, his dog brought him a turtle, which, on examination, proved to be of a distinct and rare species in this locality. It is about six inches in length by three inches in height.

Across the under side in the center is a firm strip of shell an inch or more in width, while fore and aft the portions are movable as on a perfect hinge, so that the animal can involve himself perfectly tight at will. He cannot be said to keep himself "unspotted from the curious world," however, for his back is very curiously variegated with yellow characters representing the figure 3 better than half the school children make it; and the sloping sides are ornamented with designs, also in yellow, fairly representing portions of women's dress—waists and hoop-skirts. What these designs mean Luke don't know, and I don't, and his dog don't appear to care. The animal will have to pass for what Brother Reynolds used to call a "curis critter."

I suppose naturalists would call it a box tortoise, and though they may be common in many localities, I never before found one in my peregrinations. Speaking of turtles, Mr. Hosley, while exhibiting his turtle, said it was nothing to what a New Hampshire man told him they had in a certain pond in that State. Forgive the name of the pond, and the species, although evidently terrible creatures, one undoubtedly nameless. The New Hampshire man said they were about the size of a half-bushel measure, and were given to chasing men. The method of locomotion in the chase was to get up on the edge of its shell and revolve like a wheel. The man knew all about them, for his father was once pursued by one, and hardly escaped with his life after the most surprising efforts with a heavy club. He finally conquered, and cutting off the creature's head nailed it as a trophy to the sunny side of his barn, where it would bite at his finger after being nailed there for nine days.

Your readers can exercise the right of election, and believe the New Hampshire man's story or not, as they choose, but the box tortoise is close on the truth.—Springfield Union.

The Grape Cure.

The grape treatment has been employed with favorable results by patients suffering from bronchitis and consumption in its pretubercular stages. It is especially practiced at Moran, in the Tyrol, whither large numbers of German, Russian and Italian invalids resort to experience its benefits. The patient begins by eating one or two pounds of grapes each day, dividing the quantity into three portions—one of which is taken an hour before breakfast, another before dinner, which occurs between 12 and 1 o'clock, and the third in the afternoon or evening. After two or three days the quantity is increased by half a pound daily until it reaches three or four pounds. This amount often proves sufficient, the patient finding, as a rule, that he gains in weight and strength upon it. Chronic liver complaints, especially when due to excess in wine drinking, are, it is said, notably relieved by this treatment, the potent salts in the fruit supplying the element which the wine loses in the process of manufacture. Hepatic dropsy has also been mitigated in this way. One feature in favor of the "cure" is, that no exclusive diet is prescribed. In fact, the grapes themselves are so nourishing that other food is scarcely needed.

Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and Empress of India, and the rest of the world, so to speak, actually joined in a Scotch reel at Balmoral recently.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A Revenger's Organ.

The stomach is a revenger's organ. If we assign it indigestible food, it not only refuses to perform its office, but inflicts upon us unspeakable tortures, such as those of indigestion, colic, cholera morbus, etc. Not content with giving us pain, it frequently inaugurates an excessive and wasting diarrhea, called dysentery, which carries us to our graves.

As soon as the stomach gives notice by preliminary twinges that its cargo is not to its liking, a wineglassful or two of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters should be swallowed. This admirable digestive cordial will promptly reconcile the refractory organ to its contents, and prevent any of those annoying and possibly fatal results which the presence of indigestible food in the stomach is liable to produce. The Bitters are also a superb tonic, restorative and aperient. ad 113-1134w
